THEME: "WINTERS IN DELHI"

Winter is the coldest season of the year in some parts of the northern and southern hemisphere, this season is characterized by falling snow and freezing cold temperatures, usually exacerbated by strong winds. The season which usually lasts about three months is caused by the winter-stricken area being farthest away from the sun in the earth's orbit around it. In New Delhi, the capital of India, the climate is subtropical, around this time, the days are short and nights longer, this usually reverse slowly as the season progresses. The sun comes out very late on winter mornings and when it does is not hot. People rarely come outdoors until daylight; most sit indoors by the fireside in the mornings and evenings. Everyone sees the essence of the weather report during winter, this service assumes added importance as the information present in that can be the difference between having proper protective clothing and freezing to death, knowing if the roads would be navigate-able tomorrow morning, or if the night's blizzard has called off engagements on their behalf.

Winters in Delhi

“What good is the warmth of summer, without the cold of winter to give it sweetness”.

There is no place I would rather be, than in Delhi in winters. One can define Delhi during winter. The scorching sunshine becomes simmering, the dust settles with the dew and colours come alive. Steam escapes from tea kettles and blends with the bitter cold air.

There is something about this bone-chilling season that makes me crave for it.

Food forms an integral part of the reason as to why I love Delhi so much. The piping hot, delicious and fiery khoroode ka soup sold by an old Punjabi man at Lajpat Nagar can be enjoyed for a few pennies...or the famous Amritsari fried fish being churned out at nearly every corner of the city while platters of hot moist momos at Dilli Hat cast whiffs of delightful steam and my personal favourite is the mouth watering Gajar Ka Halwa.

Another charming memory of Delhi winters is the glamour of its weddings. The capital city hosts some very show stopping weddings and it has a culture which loves to flaunt. So, these big fat events come with a lot of glamour. When a cold wave would reportedly claim lives throughout Northern India, these brave ladies would unbelievably flaunt portions of bare backs, arms, and waists.

Then there is the aroma of freshly peeled tangerines and panjiri, which the people of Delhi love to share and sample. Delhiites snugly tucked in woolens, bask in the winter sun and happily dish out winter goodies, juicy gossip, and advice.

If you believe in love at first sight, you must visit Delhi and treat yourself to Dilli Ki Sardi. There are unlimited attractions to offer its tourists with a bounty of historical attractions, cafes, bars, theme parks, bazaars, etc.

Like a secret whispered by the winter breeze, Delhi's coldest days unfold stories untold, where frosty mornings weave a tapestry of forgotten dreams and silent triumphs.

2.) A season of contrasts - where the sun bathes the monuments in a golden glow, while the evenings seek solace in the comfort of woolen wraps.

“दिल्ली की सर्दी”

थोड़ी हमदर्दी है — ये दिल्ली की सर्दी है
कोहरे की चादर — मौसम ने प्रदूषण की पहनी वर्दी है
प्राकृति ने भी — दिन छोटे रातें लम्बी करदी है
थोड़ी हमदर्दी है — ये दिल्ली की सर्दी है

हुई नाक सब की लाल — खांसी और ज़खाम
जून में जो रोज आता था — वो सूरज भी हुआ हमसे अनजान
देख कर मुनाफा.....
कल्लु हलवाई ने भी खोल की — रजाई की दकान

अलाव के सहारे खड़े लोग — अंगीठी पर पकती चाय
ठंडे पानी का करके बहाना — पड़ोसी चार दिन से न नहाए
पकवान पकते भिन्न प्रकार के.....
आज कुछ और कल कुछ और खाएं
इतनी अच्छी हैं सर्दी — यहीं बनी रहे — न फिर गर्मी आए
गर्मी में होता है बुरा हाल..सर्दी में आता क्रिसमस और नया साल
लहराती है गेहूं की फसल खेतों में सरसों, चना, और मसर दाल
तिल, मूंगफली बटती संक्रांत पे...
मानता लोहड़ी, पोंगल और ओणम का त्यौहार
थोड़ी हमदर्दी है — ये दिल्ली की सर्दी है

*Winter in Delhi: A Season of Contrasts*

Delhi, the bustling capital of India, undergoes a dramatic transformation as winter sets in. The city, known for its scorching summers, experiences a welcome respite as temperatures drop, ushering in a season of contrasts, charm, and unique experiences.

Chilly Mornings and Foggy Landscapes

The onset of winter in Delhi brings with it crisp, chilly mornings that prompt locals to bundle up in layers of warm clothing. As dawn breaks, the cityscape is often veiled in a mystical blanket of fog, creating an enchanting ambiance. The iconic India Gate and Red Fort, which stand proudly under the winter sky, take on a different allure as the fog adds an element of mystery to their silhouettes.

Season of Festivities

Winter in Delhi is not just about weather; it's also a season of vibrant festivities. Diwali, the Festival of Lights, marks the beginning of this celebratory period, filling the air with the scent of incense and the twinkle of diyas (oil lamps). The markets come alive with shoppers eager to purchase traditional sweets, colorful decorations, and festive attire.

Culinary Delights to Warm the Soul

Delhi's street food scene, always lively, takes on a special charm in winter. Food vendors strategically position themselves in busy areas, offering steaming cups of chai (tea) and an array of delectable snacks. Paranthas (stuffed flatbreads) and spicy chaat become go-to choices, providing warmth and flavor that perfectly complement the season.

Winter Fashion on Display

Delhiites take pride in showcasing their winter wardrobes, featuring stylish jackets, scarves, and boots. The city's markets become a haven for fashion enthusiasts, with a variety of winter wear options available. From traditional shawls to modern, trendy coats, Delhi's winter fashion scene is a reflection of its diverse culture and evolving trends.

Environmental Challenges

However, the winter season in Delhi also brings challenges, notably air pollution. The city often grapples with high levels of smog, attributed to various factors, including crop burning in neighboring states and vehicular emissions. As a result, residents and authorities engage in efforts to mitigate the impact of pollution, such as implementing restrictions on certain activities and promoting eco-friendly practices.

In conclusion, winter in Delhi is a multi-faceted experience, offering a blend of festive joy, culinary delights, and atmospheric changes. While the season brings people together in celebration, it also underscores the need for sustainable practices to ensure a healthier and more enjoyable winter for all residents.
